Dear supporters of aviation science and research,

I am very pleased to be able to celebrate the beginning of year 2017 with a new issue of Magazine of Aviation Development. We, members of the editorial board, have been delighted to find out that there is an increasing number of readers of our magazine among the aviation science community not only in our country but also abroad. The new layout which we introduced at the end of the last year and an increasing number of citation databases where the magazine is registered prove our effort to to increase its quality and broaden the range of expert scientific publications in the field of aviation and astronautics.

Let me wish you health and happiness in your private and professional life in year 2017 as well as inspiration in your scientific work that will result in publications which I believe you will be pleased to present on our website and MAD as well.

Kind regards

Stanislav Szabo | Head of Editorial Committee
