

Editorial

Jakub KRAUS, Ph.D.

Editor-in-Chief

Head of Department of Air Transport, CTU in Prague

Dear readers,

Cooperation is very important in every domain of human work. When fruitful cooperation is established, it can support the creation of ideas and innovations faster than single mind can. Unfortunately, there are always personal relationships, which can interfere with this. I think that personal interest should make a way for greater good. This is even more important in aviation when noble ideas should be on mind of all involved people. Moreover, if personal interests are not in the way, competition could be even better as it boosts the need for ideas and innovations even more and can create more with less resources. The World Wars are evidence of it. Therefore, cooperate and compete and do not involve personal interests, this is the only way for the aviation to stay strong.

---

Jakub Kraus | Editor-in-Chief